embroidery:

Code does not allow for large embroidery on flame resistant garments. At Benchmark we go one step further; we do not perform any direct embroidery because it punctures the flame resistant fabric thousands of times. This excessive puncturing with polyester thread can become molten and may cause severe burns when it comes in contact with a heat source. A safe alternative is a patch. When patches are sewn onto the flame resistant garment, the flame resistant fabric is punctured with as little as 50 stitches.
